This is the third book in Jeff Davis' continuing series of books on paranormal events in the Pacific Northwest. These are true stories, taken from Native American legends, books, newspapers and first person interviews. Jeff has collected stories from many of the major cities of Washington and Oregon; Seattle, Portland, Spokane and the Tri-Cities as well as many smaller cities and towns. There are military ghosts, playful ghosts, frightening ghosts and ghostly animals. Many of the haunted places in this book are open to the public as restaurants, pubs, theaters, hotels and museums. There are also strange stories about the many semi-mystical "critters" of the Pacific Northwest. There are new Bigfoot sightings, rains of salamanders, and strange sea creatures in the Puget Sound. In keeping with his curiosity about the science of parapsychology, Jeff examines the phenomenon of ghost photography and how it is supposed to capture spirit images. The ancient practice of firewalking is alive and well in Washington State and Jeff discusses a walk conducted near his home in Southwest Washington.

About the Author Jefferson Davis was born in Washington State in 1962. According to family tradition his is related to Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederacy. Jeff has been interested in history, archaeology and the paranormal since he was a child. He has a Master's Degree in Archaeology and has worked as an archaeologist across the Pacific Northwest. Prior to publishing his books on the paranormal, Jeff wrote several historical and archaeological papers on Native Americans and the Vikings of Greenland. In addition to his academic career, Jeff has served over 20 years in the U.S. Army and Army Reserves. He has been stationed or sent on missions in several foreign countries, including: Japan, Korea, Italy, England, Germany and most recently, Bosnia.
