My husband and I just returned from Montana and other than one site that must have been affected by massive road rebuilding, we had little trouble finding the other sites that were listed. Of course, with this year's massive flooding due to high amounts of winter snow, one of the sites was inaccessible due to a road washout and cleanup of toxic waste from old mine tailings prevented us from visiting yet another. The ones we were able to reach proved delightful for me as a lifelong rockhound. I found garnets, golden barite crystals, fossils and numerous other minerals. My husband even joined in the search. As to the signage for the Spokane Bar Sapphire Mine, there is currently no problem with it. I am relatively new to GPS so I cannot speak to that concern, because putting in coordinates is not something that I know about. The authors put in a lot of time and research as I can see and I am looking forward to returning to Montana to explore yet more sites. We were able to pick and choose what sites to go to by the descriptive analysis and excellent information about how much effort would be needed to reach each place and time needed to find what we wanted.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great series for rockhoundsBy Alice GutshallLove the Rockhounding, "states" series. Great detailed information on gps coordinates, roads and photos as well as where to find places to stay and camp. I usually have a corresponding Delorme map book as a companion guide. I will never buy new again when I can find used at discounted prices. I would suggest purchasing a newer edition as locations open and close on occasion.

A complete guide and source-book brimming with advice on collecting and preparing gems and minerals.
