

(Download pdf ebook) Round Ireland with a Fridge

Round Ireland with a Fridge

Tony Hawks

DOC | *audiobook | ebooks | Download PDF | ePub

DOWNLOAD

READ ONLINE

#99830 in Books St Martin s Griffin 2001-03-07 2001-03-07Original language:EnglishPDF # 1 .32 x .3 x 5.56l, .60 #File Name: 0312274920264 pagespart travelogue autobiography | File size: 69.Mb

Tony Hawks : Round Ireland with a Fridge before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Round Ireland with a Fridge:

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. That Fecking fridge!By Sean HarrisonDon't read this book unless you can stand to laugh - a lot. This is like Douglas Adams having a conversation with Tom Robbins as recorded by Bill Bryson and read by Stephan Frye. Tony Hawks is the next great voice in comedic travel journalism - among the other three. Read everything he has written and will write and your life will be better for it. He visits a king, attends sheep trails, tries out at a bachelor competition, goes surfing in the North Sea, falls off a wall kissing a girl and gets laid in a dog house - along with traveling the sights and back towns of the emerald isle where-in he becomes a local hero and an international legend. Plus he wins a cracking good bet in the end. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Greek Philosophy? Nah. Have you heard of Fridge Philosophy? By Jonas Tony Hawks journey around Ireland is something you need to read to understand. Filled with pure, good human humor and hospitality through and through, definitely a worth while read. My biggest complaint would have to be the author's name (which he can't really control, can he?). It's almost impossible to look him up thanks to that pro skater. Also, in the center of the book are included a few pictures of his journey and people he met- however, Tony neglects to include a PICTURE OF THE FRIDGE SURFING. He explicitly mentions taking it, and it's a shame we couldn't see it. Ah well. 4 of 5 people found the following review helpful. Alt Title: Tony Hawks Tries Desperately to Win Friends By Victoria Prince Tony Hawks is a British comedian who, while drinking with some friends, decided to enter into a bet that he could transport a small fridge around Ireland using basically only the kindness of strangers. There are some other rules, and the premise seemed pretty funny. I expected anecdotes of quirky Irish barkeeps, maybe some Brit-Irish tension etc. What I got instead was Tony Hawks trying pretty hard to get me to like him. Every story centered around how very quirky and socially inappropriate he is, and he is right; I didn't finish the book. I got some laughs out of it, but in general the whole thing is very one-note, like somebody telling their "I got drunk at the bar and it got so CRAZY" story at every party to anyone who will listen.

Have you ever made a drunken bet? Worse, still, have you ever tried to win one? In attempting to hitchhike round Ireland with a fridge, Tony Hawks did both, and his foolhardiness led him to one of the best experiences of his life. Joined by his trusty traveling companion-cum-domestic appliance, he made his way from Dublin to Donegal, from Sligo through Mayo, Galway, Clare, Kerry, Cork, Wexford, Wicklow--and back again to Dublin. In their month of madness, Tony and his fridge met a real prince, a bogus king, and the fridge got christened. They surfed together, entered a bachelor festival, and one of them had sex without the other knowing. And unexpectedly, the fridge itself became a momentary focus for the people of Ireland. An international bestseller, Round Ireland with a Fridge is a classic travel adventure in the tradition of Bill Bryson with a dash of Dave Barry.

.com On his only prior visit to Ireland, English songwriter-comic Tony Hawks had seen a man hitchhiking with a refrigerator. For years, he was wont to tell the tale during late-night drinking matches, and after one particularly heavy-duty night of partying, he awoke to find a bet scrawled pillowside: a friend wagered 100 pounds that Hawks wouldn't travel Ireland for a month with a refrigerator at his side. Out of this stupid premise, a ridiculously amusing book was born. Quickly discovered by the Irish media, the thumbing Englishman finds that he and his box fridge are elevated to celebrity status, and there's no dearth of rides, places to stay, or goofy people to meet, from kings to spoons players to locals who take his fridge surfing. As insightful about the strange inner workings of Hawk's mind as it is about charming peculiarities of Irishmen--it's doubtful that Hawks would have been similarly embraced by Germans, Italians, or the French--Round Ireland with a Fridge is an entirely silly, heartwarming tale told in a rollicking funny and refreshing style. --Melissa Rossi From Publishers Weekly When British writer, performer and musician Hawks makes a drunken bet for ?100 that he can "hitchhike round the circumference of Ireland, with a fridge, in one calendar month," he starts, in 1997, an unexpectedly wonderful adventure into the good-natured soul of the Irish people. Though the book begins inauspiciously as a bad parody of Dave Barry's travel books, with Hawks assuming a smug distance from the people and events he encounters, happily fate intervenes in the form of a jovial radio-show host who convinces Hawks to phone in daily to share updates about his travels with the fridge. Almost overnight, Hawks becomes a regional legend. "The Fridge Man" A with all sorts of people willing to help him achieve his goal, however silly it may be. What could have been a convenient contrivance actually allows a kinder and far funnier Hawks to appear, as his daily talks with his radio "fans" bring him unexpected delights, including encounters with an overenthusiastic innkeeper and his family, the amazing champion surfer Bingo, various musicians and lots of pub visits. In the end, Hawks's book becomes a lively celebration of contemporary Irish society and the goodwill of its people that neither revels in irony nor descends into mawkishness. (Mar.) Copyright 2000 Reed Business Information, Inc. From Library Journal Yes, a fridge. People sometimes do the craziest things when they've had too many beers. Hawks, known throughout Great Britain for his humor and appearances on various radio and television shows, made a drunken bet with a friend that he could successfully hitchhike around Ireland with a refrigerator as his traveling companion. Once sober, he realized the magnitude of the task he'd set himself but agreed to honor the bet anyway. The result is a hysterically funny travelog, in which Hawks shares his warm regard for the Irish, his amusing contacts with the natives, anecdotes from places he stayed, and brief tales about those who gave him rides. Anyone who enjoys Bill Bryson or Dave Barry will greatly appreciate Hawks for a writing style that seems to be a stew made of one part Monty Python, one part Benny Hill, and two parts Barry. Highly recommended for public libraries and academic libraries with browsing collections. -Sandra Knowles, Henderson Cty. P.L., Hendersonville, NC Copyright 2000 Reed

